

For my teaching philosophy I believe that it is important for every student to have an equal opportunity to learn effectively and in a way that works for them. I don't like it whenever students fall behind or get off in class and that's usually because of them facing problems within the class that I need to help them overcome. Whether that be providing them with text that is on their level and allows them to understand the content on the same level as their other students or it could be that there is some form of barrier like language or a disability that I need to work through with them so that we can get them on their path.

I feel that it is important for every student to be engaged and actively involved within the classroom environment. Without proper engagement the students won't actually be interested in what they're learning and properly remember it. It doesn't matter to me if a student is able to just copy word for word what I say or if they are able to copy information and put it into a different situation. I want them to truly understand the information I'm giving them and be able to apply it in various aspects of life. But I feel that engagement is the thing that drives and allows people to have that ability to remember more stuff and get the concept better. If people are actively involved and wanting to learn something, then they will remember it and keep it in their mind longer.
