Corporate Communication

Corporate communication majors develop skills that make them "most likely to succeed." The Wall Street Journal reports that leaders in corporations and industry consistently rank communication skills among the most needed in the workplace. They identify communication deficiencies as extremely common among employees and responsible for significant problems with efficiency, safety and other concerns.

As a result, corporate communication majors enter the workforce with an edge, having highly developed communication skills. These skills allow them positive recognition and upward mobility as they excel on the job.

Corporate communication majors receive interdisciplinary training courses in management and marketing from the University's award-winning Donald L. Harrison College of Business.

Although many majors train with a specific career in mind, the skills developed transfer to a variety of careers, enabling graduates to thrive in today's marketplace where most professionals can expect to change careers several times. Majors also benefit from the department's active membership in the National Communication Association.

Corporate Communication students will...

- Interact with well-trained faculty in small-class settings.
- Learn and train in state-of-the-art facilities in Academic Hall and in the Harrison College of Business in Dempster Hall.
- Develop oral, written, visual communication, listening, management, marketing, leadership and other skills.
- Experience one-on-one advising to determine the best courses and minor (or second major) best suited to the students goals and aspirations.
- Have access to our student organization COMMrades for service and networking opportunities.
