

Master of Arts (MA)

The Master of Arts Degree in History will enhance your knowledge of history and hone research, organizational, and written and oral communication skills developed during undergraduate study. It will prepare you for further academic study and develop professional competencies through extensive reading, focused examination of select historical topics, and rigorous research and writing projects.

Faculty support the development of individual interests through research and independent projects. They are well-prepared instructors and active scholars, encouraging students to explore history beyond the classroom. Professors have teaching and publication experience in a variety of fields, including United States history, Modern Europe, Latin America, Medieval history, the Middle East, and public history fields. Many have national or international reputations, teaching awards, and recognitions from the university and the broader community. Graduate classes average fewer than 15 students, which allows for meaningful interaction between students and instructors.

History students will...

- Develop an advanced knowledge of issues, themes, theories, and methods of history.
- Develop advanced skills for communicating historical knowledge.
- Develop advanced critical thinking, reasoning, and analysis skills through historical investigation and analysis.
